

ABSTRACT

An information transmitting apparatus includes an information storage part for storing information, a sensing part for sensing a mobile condition such as a speed, and an information transmission part for changing an information transmittable distance based on the mobile condition before transmitting the information. Based on the mobile condition, the transmitting apparatus automatically changes an information transmittable distance, thereby allowing an apparatus that operates by receiving the information to operate in good timing.